The Union Meetings Have Ended. God and the Church Still Call

The church does not save. But it is for people who don't mind being saved. Just as the school system doesn't educate. It exists for people who will accept education. Education depends on the consent of the individual. So does salvation. Christ founded the church. It is His idea and He asks His followers to approve and sustain it. Can that be done reluctantly, and privately and timidly—with honor to Christ? Or must it not be done frankly, openly, boldly? Suppose ALL His followers were in secret; would His church flourish? Plymouth people, by the hundreds, should yet acknowledge openly Him that they trust secretly.

North Village F. W. HILLMAN

TINNING HARDWARE

Second Increment Leaves for Camp Custer

Eighty-one Young Men of the Fourth District Left Tuesday Morning, Amid the Cheers of the Home Folk; the Music of the Band and Screaming of the Factory Whistles.

Plymouth Township Contributes Eleven More of Her Loyal Sons to the Great National Army.

Not unlike that event which occurred in Plymouth on September 21st, last, when eighty-two young men of the Fourth District of which Plymouth is a part, left here for Camp Custer, was that of last Tuesday morning, when the second increment of eighty-one men left for the concentration camp at Battle Creek, and a finer body of men taken as a whole would be hard to find.

Again the citizens of this village have heard the tramp of marching men and the sounds of stirring music on their streets, and each succeeding re-enactment of these scenes brings to each one of us, the stern realities of war.

The men assembled at the U. S. headquarters in the village hall, at 7 o'clock and responded to roll call, and received their final instructions from the members of the local board.

At the command of "fall in," given by Fred Fleming of Des Moines, who with Guy Horn of Belleville, were suggested by the local board to have charge of the men until their arrival at Camp Custer, the men formed in line for the march to the station.

The procession was headed by F. D. Schraeger, chairman of the local committee, carrying the flag, followed by the band, the members of the local board and the selected men, while a large number of citizens brought up the rear.

At the station a great crowd had gathered, relatives and friends of the departing soldiers, who had come to bid them farewell and good-bye. Here and there in the crowd that packed the station platform were those same little groups, the center of which was a young man on whose coat lapel was tied an identification card that marked him a soldier in the national army, saying farewell to his loved ones.

While the mothers and sisters struggled bravely to keep back the tears, yet they would come, as the hour of departure drew near. The lively music of the band helped wonderfully to relieve the tenacity of the situation as they played piece after piece.

ing of the most tempting menu provided by Landford Lorenz, Rev. Evans of Redford, and John M. Cody of Belleville, were called upon for a few remarks. Both of the speakers made splendid talks along patriotic lines. A quartet composed of some of the boys rendered several fine selections. At seven o'clock all of the boys who cared to do so were invited to attend the picture show at the hall. Those who did not accept the invitation spent the time in a social manner at the station. The boys expressed themselves as delighted with the way in which they were entertained and all have a warm spot in their hearts for the Local Board and the citizens of old Plymouth.

"Y" Fund Over-Subscribed in Plymouth

Again the patriotic citizens of Plymouth have come to the front and went "over the top," in over-subscribing their quota of $1500 in the great $35,000,000 drive for the Y. M. C. A. army fund. Although the time was short, only a few days in which to do the work, yet the committees succeeded in securing a total of $1,560. This is a mighty fine showing and speaks well for the patriotism and loyalty of the citizens of Plymouth and vicinity.

Woman's Literary Club

The Woman's Literary Club met at the home of Mrs. E. O. Huston on Penniman avenue, last Friday afternoon. Twenty-eight active, eight associate members and one guest were present. In the absence of the president and the 1st and 2nd vice presidents, Mrs. Wm. T. Pettigill acted as chairman of the business session. Many of the ladies of the Red Cross and those who were not members, being made during the afternoon.

Dec V. Duryee, who is employed in Detroit, but whose home is three miles east of Plymouth, and Miss Ada A. Wall of Newburg, were united in marriage by Rev. Frank M. Field at the Methodist parsonage Wednesday noon. The young couple will live in Birmingham, where they will be glad to see their Plymouth friends.

William Bagnall is visiting friends and relatives in Alma, Mich.

Red Cross Needs More Help

During the past two weeks many new names have been added to the working divisions of the Plymouth Auxiliary of the American Red Cross. Work is being done on the second floor of the new school building every afternoon except Saturday. If you do not already know about the work that is being carried on there, call any afternoon and the chairman will be glad to show you what the Plymouth ladies are doing. If you haven't been, come. There is room for all and we need your help.

The following article from the Detroit Journal gives an idea of the great need for more surgical dressings in France:

"A serious calamity and national disgrace threatens America unless more surgical dressings are made immediately by the women of the nation."

This warning was cabled to H. G. Gibson, chairman of the Central division of the American Red Cross society at Chicago, by Major Grayson M. P. Murphy, in charge of the Red Cross at Paris, and was announced in Detroit by Mrs. John Glass, division superintendent of surgical dressings, composed of Wisconsin, Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois and Michigan.

"Upon the Red Cross rests directly the responsibility of supplying us with surgical dressings," cabled Chairman Murphy, "and nothing in the whole situation here is equally important. Red Cross standard dressings in millions must be sent over with all possible speed. American women must prepare with all enthusiasm and speed possible the dressings that mean life or death to our own men. It is the most vital thing in America today."

Annual Thanksgiving Service

The annual Thanksgiving union service will be held in the Baptist church next Thursday evening, Nov. 29, at 7:30 o'clock. Rev. Karl P. Miller of the Presbyterian church will preach and the Baptist choir will provide special music for the occasion.

Feels Proud of Plymouth

I feel proud of Plymouth, not because the quota was raised, but because it was raised on time, though we started three days late. The prompt response shows that Plymouth people have been keeping themselves informed. No argument was necessary. When the time comes we can do it again.—K. P. Miller, Chairman.

DAIRY PRODUCTS WORTH $78,417,000

VALUE OF STATE OUTPUT FOR 1917 NEARLY DOUBLE THAT OF LAST YEAR.

CUSTER WASTE BRANDED AS LIE

Stories About Wasteful Methods At Camp Spread By People Intent On Creating Discontent.

With the prices prevailing this year the estimated value of Michigan's dairy products for 1917 is $78,417,000, according to H. D. Wendt, dairy expert of the state dairy and food commission.

In 1899 the estimated value of Michigan's dairy products was $3,918,995, and in 1909, $14,287,499. Last year it was $43,556,200.

The cow population of Michigan, according to Wendt, numbers approximately 665,000 head, producing 311,400,000 gallons of milk each year.

Of the total milk output, 31,000,000 gallons goes into the manufacture of condensed milk and milk powder, 5,030,000 gallons into ice cream, 10,400,000 gallons into cheese and 150,000,000 gallons into butter.

The manufactured products last year were as follows: 51,500,000 pounds of butter, 6,840,000 pounds of cheese, 130,500,000 pounds of condensed milk and 4,700,000 gallons of ice cream.

While the state's dairy expert says that it is impossible to make an absolutely accurate estimate as to the cost of production, he believes that the average cost is approximately seven cents a quart.

Faulty methods of delivering rather than excessive profits are to blame for the high cost of milk, according to Mr. Wendt.

Camp Waste Branded As Lie

The quartermaster of Camp Custer, Major M. M. Garrett brands as German propaganda the story that large piles of waste lumber have been burned at Camp Custer.

Officers say German sympathizers are carrying on a campaign of lies concerning conditions at the camp, to weaken the morale of the citizens of Michigan.

Major Garrett explains that during operations, as a precaution against fire risk, all waste material was taken from the buildings and placed in huge piles. A small portion of this waste was used for garbage incineration.

According to Federal Disbursing Officer W. J. Baker, the expense of registering a selected man, giving him his physical examination and allowing for exemption claims, is approximately $13.

Under the old system of obtaining recruits the expense of recruiting stations, officers, advertising and all other items made the initial cost approximately $100 per man.

When the Liberty bond sale was on the Custer soldiers were so enthusiastic they subscribed, in many cases, up to their last dollar, aside from any moneys allotted dependent relatives.

The instruction given at first is entirely theoretical with daily lectures at brigade headquarters. Later actual work will be done on the new artillery range, 5,000 yards long, stretching south from Detroit Hill.

Shots will fall in the swamps, will be observed from posts in trees, on ridges, in health, all concealed after the best manner of Europe.

For the range, two roads, the Territorial and the Reese, will be closed and guarded so that the shells which will fly next month may injure no one.

Half a million dollars is being raised by Michigan and Wisconsin Pythians to take care of the Knights of Pythias among the soldiers from the two states.

First actual firing on the rifle and artillery range at Camp Custer was started at Camp Custer when 50 machine guns went into action on the range.

A "mild" sentence for desertion was approved by Maj. Gen. Dickman in the case of Private Frederick J. Hagen, of the 110th engineers.

Fifteen thousand two-pound loaves of bread can be produced every 12 hours by the big three-oven bakery which supplies Camp Custer with its daily bread.

Attacks by the Teutonic allies along the Asiago plateau front have been repulsed by the Italians, according to official communication of Rome.

STOLEN REPTILE CAUSES UPROAR

Wiggles Out of a Wicker Suitcase and There Ensues a Tableau.

Chicago—West Madison street is trying to solve the strange mystery of the wicker suitcase and the eight-foot snake. In some ways the tale has more wiggles than the story of the mahogany table and the clucking hen.

A young man wearily moving westward with what appeared to be a heavy and aged suitcase stopped in front of 1341 West Madison street and laid his burden down.

The head of a snake appeared and then eight feet of snake wriggled out on to the sidewalk.

After many mutual inquiries by which it was established that everybody saw what everybody else saw it was decided to call the police.

The snake crawled back into the suitcase soon after the police arrived.

The corner policeman heard a scream of fright and saw the young man legging it westward.

Church Members, Attention!

Pastors, and churches and non-church members—everybody who came out to hear Dr. Fikes in the recent campaign, are urged to gather again at the school auditorium, Tuesday, November 27th, at 7 p. m., to hear Dr. Willis A. Moore, (successor to Dr. Lee S. McCollister) of the Universalist Church, Detroit. Your pastors are in a position to correct what Dr. Fikes may have said that did not fit your particular case. The Universalist church has not the same opportunity, except as it makes the special opportunity. We feel that all people who pretend to be Christians, should be drawn nearer together rather than forever going farther apart. Misunderstandings divide us. Let us tell you our faith with special reference to those points which Dr. Fikes misrepresented. Questions may be handed in in advance, and an opportunity will be given in the meeting to bring out points about the faith. This is not movement to start up the local church.

Ada M. Safford, representing members and friends of the Universalist church.

Field, which was well worth hearing and a program then followed of songs by John Higgins; readings by Miss Hoisington, Mrs. Thomas, Mrs. Higgins and Miss Youngs; recitation, Verne Hoisington; an instrumental solo by Mrs. Egloff, which was enjoyed by all. They adjourned to meet with Mr. and Mrs. Perkins on East Ann Arbor street in February.

An Old Resident of Nankin Passes Away

Joseph Herr of Nankin, aged 84, died at his home early Tuesday morning of this week, after a brief illness. His niece, Mrs. Melvin Joy, and her son-in-law, James McNab, were with him at the passing away. For a number of years, Mr. Herr had been the sole survivor of the late Fidel Herr family which emigrated from Germany in 1830, reaching New York after a six weeks' voyage in a sailing vessel. In 1831 they came to Michigan and located on the farm on which Joseph was born two years later, and on which he lived until the close of his life. This farm was paid for in coin, mainly silver, which the family brought with them. While in no sense a recluse, Mr. Herr had lived alone by preference for a number of years. Several years ago he sold the farm with the stipulation that he was to occupy the house as long as he lived. In the pioneer days of his residence in Nankin, the trip from home to Plymouth was made with an ox team and cart, while later, as many of the older residents of Plymouth will recall, the Herr boys came with beautiful high spirited horses. Gentle and unassuming in manner, strong in integrity and uprightness, he endeared himself to his friends and relatives, who while they rejoice in the peaceful passage to the life beyond, will not cease to remember him in their yearly round. Mr. Herr is survived by many nephews and nieces, those in the more immediate vicinity being: Mrs. Melvina Joy and Mrs. Marietta Barnes of Detroit; Mrs. Emily Patterson of Davison; Mrs. John Patterson of Livonia; and Mrs. Minot Weed and the Misses S. J. and R. Holbrook of Plymouth. The funeral services were held at the house Thursday afternoon at one o'clock, conducted by Rev. Frank M. Field of the Plymouth M. E. church. Burial in Newburg cemetery.

The Fikes Evangelistic Campaign a Great Success

With more than three hundred openly taking a definite stand for Jesus Christ and promising to line up with one of the local churches and with hundreds of church members re-consecrating themselves to God, the four weeks union evangelistic campaign under the leadership of Maurice Penfield Fikes, D. D. and his party proved even more successful than its fond supporters had dared to expect. The local pastors and members of the evangelistic committee express themselves as believing that no other man living could have done more for Plymouth religiously than Dr. Fikes has done, and that Plymouth churches will never be the same as they were before.

The campaign came to a climatic ending with three big union meetings on Sunday, the evangelist preaching three powerful sermons which were heard by congregations which filled the large high school auditorium. The Clansmen's Rally in the afternoon was a most unique service which those present will not soon forget. The center section of seats was entirely filled with nearly three hundred people who during the campaign had taken their stand at the evangelist's call and who, at the close of a stirring sermon on "Leaving All," went forward to assure the churches that they meant business and had come out "clean cut for God." Following this scene by which all present were deeply moved and urged to give their hearts to the great preacher. About two score people answered the evangelist's call for converts at this last service.

A free will offering for Dr. Fikes and his party was taken at the three services on the last day, amounting to $550. This was made up of a great many small amounts, with the exception of two gifts of $100 and $35 each.

Dr. Fikes and his party go to Deery, Pa., for their next campaign, but after the holidays may be in a meeting at Howell. If such be the case many Plymouth admirers will plan to hear his preaching.

The local churches will have their own services next Sunday and undoubtedly will have overflowing congregations, augmented by the new recruits from the Fikes campaign. Many will be received as members of the various churches.

Mrs. Louisa Bassett

Dies at 94 at Home of Granddaughter in Caro.

Mrs. Louisa Bassett passed away Sunday evening at eleven o'clock at the home of her granddaughter, Mrs. Jacob Bates at the advanced age of 94.

Louisa Hackett was born in England, May 6, 1823, and came to New York state with her parents when only six years old. They made the journey in a sailing vessel and were seven weeks crossing.

She married William A. Bassett in Auburn, New York. Their home was in Plymouth, Mich., for half a century, where they were active members of the Baptist church.

After the death of her husband in 1893, Mrs. Bassett came to Caro to make her home with her granddaughter, Mrs. Bates, and has been most tenderly cared for. She was called "Grandma Bassett" by all who knew her. Each year her birthday was celebrated by her family and friends, who delighted to do honor to this venerable lady.

Last winter she fell and fractured her hip and her death resulted from this injury. She kept her mental faculties to the last.

Mrs. Bassett is survived by one daughter, Mrs. J. P. Westphal, and two sons, William H. Bassett of Detroit, and Lewis A. Bassett of Carbondale, Pa., who were with her when the end came, also the wife of the latter son. Besides her children, six grandchildren and six great grandchildren survive her.

Funeral services were held at the Bates home on Fremont street, Tuesday afternoon at 3:30, conducted by Rev. Joseph Fox of the Baptist church and burial was made in the family lot at Plymouth.—Tuscola County Courier.

Some people think that business is the art of getting money as fast as you can and as much as you can. Those people also think that a Conscience has no being in Business. But we don't.

We think that the Business without a Conscience will never achieve Success. To treat our customers fairly—to mark our goods at one price (in plain figures), fair and equitable to us both—to never hold questionable sales—to ask only the conscience from our patrons

King of the Khyber Rifles

A Romance of Adventure
By TALBOT MUNDY

Copyright by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

THE MYSTERIOUS RANGAR DESERTS CAPT. KING AND HIS CUTTHROAT ESCORT IN A DANGEROUS PART OF KHYBER PASS AND ADVENTURES COME RAPIDLY.

Synopsis.—At the beginning of the world war Capt. Athelstan King of the British Indian army and of its secret service, is ordered to Delhi to meet Yasmini, a dancer, and go with her to Khatwa to quiet the outlaws there who are said by spies to be preparing for a Jihad or holy war. On his way to Delhi King quietly tells a plan to assassinate him and gets evidence that Yasmini has already gone north. Rewa Gunga, Yasmini's man, who says she has already gone north, and at her town house witnesses queer dances. Ismail, an Afghani, becomes his body servant and protector. He rescues some of Yasmini's Hilmens and takes them north with him, tricking the Rangar into going ahead.

It was not a long journey, nor a very slow one, for there was nothing to block the way except occasional men with tags, who guarded culverts and little bridges. It was low tide under the Himalayas. The road that was draining India of her armed men had left Jamrud high and dry with a little nondescript force stranded there, as it were, under a British major and some native officers. Frowning over Jamrud were the lean "Hills," peopled by the fiercest fighting men on earth, and the clouds that hung over the Khyber's course were an accent to the savagery.

But King smiled merrily as he jumped out of the train, and Rewa Gunga, who was there to meet him, advanced with outstretched hand and a smile that would have melted snow on the distant peaks if he had only looked the other way.

"Welcome, King sahib!" he laughed, with the air of a skilled fence who addresses another, better one. "I shall know better another time and let you keep in front of me! I trust you had a comfortable journey?"

"Thanks," said King, shaking hands with him, and then turning away to unlock the carriage doors that held his prisoners in. They were baying now like wolves to be free, and they surged out, like wolves from a cage, to clamor round the Rangar, pawing him and struggling to be the first to ask him questions.

"Nay, ye mountain people; nay!" he laughed. "I, too, am from the plains! What do I know of your families or of your friends? Am I to be torn to pieces to make a meal?"

At that Ismail interfered, with the aid of an ash pick handle, chanced beside the track. Laughing as if the whole thing was the greatest joke imaginable, Rewa Gunga fell into stride beside King and led him away in the direction of some tents.

"She is up the pass ahead of us," he announced. "She was in the deuce of a hurry, I can assure you. She wanted to wait and meet you, but matters were too jolly well urgent, and we shall have our dally work cut out to catch her, you can bet! But I have everything ready—tents and beds and stores—everything!"

King looked over his shoulder to make sure that Ismail was bringing the little leather bag along.

"So have I," he said quietly. "I have horses," said Rewa Gunga, "and mules and—"

"How did she travel up the Khyber?" King asked him, and the Rangar spared him a curious sideways glance.

"The 'Hills' are her escort, King sahib. She is mistress in the 'Hills.' There isn't a murdering ruffian who would not lie down and let her walk on him! She rode away alone on a thoroughbred mare and she jolly well left me the mare's double on which to follow her. Come and look."

Not far from where the tents had been pitched in a cluster a string of horses whinnied at a picket post. King saw the two good horses ready for himself, and ten mules beside them that would have done credit to any outfit. But at the end of the line, pawing at the trampled grass, was a black mare that made his eyes open wide. Once in a hundred years or so a viceroyn's cup or a Derby is won by an animal that can stand and look and move as that mare did.

Heard you were coming, of course. Anything I can do?"

"Tell me anything you know," said King, offering him a cheroot, which the other accepted. As he bit off the end that King could see the oncoming escort and what it carried. Courtenay read his eyes.

"Two of my men!" he said. "Found 'em up the pass. Gazi work, I think. They were cut all to pieces. There's a big Ishkar gathering somewhere in the 'Hills,' and it might have been done by their skirmishers, but I don't think so."

"Who's supposed to be leading it?" "Can't find out," said Courtenay. Then he stepped aside to give orders to the escort. They carried the dead bodies into the fort.

"Know anything of Yasmini?" King asked, when the major stood in front of him again.

"By reputation, of course, yes. Famous person—sings like a bulbul—dances like the devil—lives in Delhi—mean her?"

King nodded. "When did she start up the pass?" he asked.

"She didn't start! I know who goes up and who comes down."

"Know anything of Rewa Gunga?" King asked him.

"Not much. Tried to buy his mare. Seen the animal? Gad! I'd give a year's pay for that beast! He wouldn't sell and I don't blame him."

"He told me just now," said King, "that Yasmini went up the pass unescorted, mounted on a mare the very deuce of a black one you say you wanted to buy."

Courtenay whistled.

"I'm sorry, King. I'm sorry to say he lied."

King threw away his less than half consumed cheroot and they started to walk together toward King's camp. After a few minutes they arrived at a point from which they could see the prisoners lined up in a row facing Rewa Gunga. A less experienced eye than King's or Courtenay's could have recognized their attitude of reverent obedience. Within two minutes the Rangar stood facing them, looking more at ease than they.

"I was cautioning those savages!" he explained. "They're an escort, but they need a reminder of the fact, else they might jolly well imagine themselves mountain goats and scatter among the 'Hills!'"

He drew out his wonderful cigarette case and offered it open to Courtenay, who hesitated, and then helped himself. King refused.

"Major Courtenay has just told me," said King, "that nobody resembling Yasmini has gone up the pass recently. Can you explain?"

"Dear Captain King: Kindly be quick to follow me, because there is much talk of a Ishkar getting ready for a raid. I shall wait for you in Khatwa, whither my messenger shall show the way. Please let him keep his rifle. Trust him, and Rewa Gunga and my thirty whom you brought with you. The messenger's name is Darya Khan. Your servant, Yasmini."

He passed the note to Courtenay, who read it and passed it back.

"I'll find out," the major muttered, "how she got up the pass without my knowing it. Somebody's tail shall be twisted for this!"

But he did not find out until King told him, and that was many days later, when a terrible cloud no longer threatened India from the north.

CHAPTER VII.

"I think I envy you!" said Courtenay. They were seated in Courtenay's tent, face to face across the low table, with guttering lights between and Ismail outside the tent handing plates and things to Courtenay's servant inside.

"You're about the first who has admitted it," said King.

Not far from them a herd of pack-camels grunted and bubbled after the evening meal. The evening breeze brought the smoke of dung fires down to them, and an Afghan—one of the little crowd of traders who had come down with the camels three hours ago—sang a wailing song about his lady-love. Overhead the sky was like black velvet, pierced with silver holes.

"You see, you can't call our end of this business war—it's sport," said Courtenay. "Two battalions of Khyber rifles, lifted to hold the pass against their own relations. Against them a couple of hundred thousand tribesmen, very hungry for loot, armed with up-to-date rifles, thanks to Russia yesterday and Germany today, and all perfectly well aware that a world war is in progress. That's sport, you know—not the 'image and likeness of war' that Jorocks called it, but the real red rooster. And you've got a mystery thrown in to give it piquancy. I haven't found out yet how Yasmini got up the pass without my knowing it. I thought it was a trick. Didn't believe she'd gone. Yet all you men swear they know she has gone, and not one of them will own to having seen her go! What'd you think of that?"

For a while, as he ate Courtenay's broiled quail, King did not answer. But the merry smile had left his eyes and he seemed for once to be letting his mind dwell on conditions as they concerned himself.

"How many men have you at the fort?" he asked at last.

"Two hundred—all natives."

"What's the use of talking?" answered Courtenay. "You know what it means when men of an alien race stand up to you and grin when they salute. They're my own."

King nodded. "Die with you, eh?" "To the last man," said Courtenay quietly with that conviction that can only be arrived at in one way, and that not the easiest.

"I'd die alone," said King. "I'll be lonely in the 'Hills.' Got any more quail?"

And that was all he ever did say on that subject, then or at any other time.

"What shall you do first after you get up the pass? Call on your brother at All Masjid? He's likely to know a lot by the time you get there."

"Not sure," said King. "May and may not. I'd like to see him. Haven't seen the old chap in a donkey's age. How is he?"

"Well two days ago," said Courtenay. "Here's wishing you luck!" said King. "It's time to go, sir."

He rose, and Courtenay walked with him to where his party waited in the dark, chilled by the cold wind whistling down the Khyber. Rewa Gunga sat mounted at their head, and close to him his personal servant rode another horse. Behind them were the mules, and then in a cluster, each with a load of some sort on his head, were the thirty prisoners, and Ismail took charge of them officiously. Darya Khan, the man who had brought the letter down the pass, kept close to Ismail.

King mounted, and Courtenay shook hands with him, too. "Forward! March!" King ordered, and the little procession started.

"Oh, men of the 'Hills,' ye look like ghosts—like, greyed-up ghosts!" jeered Courtenay, as they all slid past him. "Ye look like dead men, going to be judged!"

Nobody answered. They strode behind the horses, with the swift, silent strides of men who are going home to the "Hills," but even they, here in the "Hills" and knowing them as a wolf-pack knows its hunting ground, were awed by the gloom of Khyber month ahead. King's voice was the first to break the silence, and he did not speak until Courtenay was out of earshot. Then:

"Men of the 'Hills!'" he called. "Kuch der nahin hai!"

"Nahin hai! Nah!" shouted Ismail. "So speaks a man! Hear that, ye mountain folk! He says, 'There is no such thing as fear!'"

In his place in the lead, King whistled softly to himself, but he drew an automatic pistol from his place beneath his armpit and transferred it to a ready position.

Fear or no fear, Khyber month is haunted after dark by the men whose blood feuds are too reckless, raw to let them dare go home and for whom the British hangings very likely wait a mile or two farther south. It is one of the few places in the world where a pistol is better than a thick stick.

Boulder, crag and loose rock faded into gloom behind, in front on both hands ragged hillsides were beginning to close in, and the wind, whose home is in Allah's refuse heap, whistled as it searched busily among the black ravines. Then presently the shadow of the thousand-foot-high Khyber walls began to cover them.

After a while King's cheroot went out, and he threw it away. A little blue alien light that had started the race. He suspected that there were many torches placed at intervals.

His own horse developed a speed and stamina he had not suspected, and probably the Rangar did not dare extend the mare to her limit in the dark; at all events, for ten, perhaps fifteen, minutes of breathless galloping he almost made a race of it, keeping the Rangar either within sight or sound.

But then the mare swerved suddenly behind a boulder and was gone. He spurred round the same great rock a minute later, and was faced by a blank wall of shale that brought his horse up all standing. It led steep up for a thousand feet to the skyline. There was not so much as a goat-track to show in which direction the mare had gone, nor a sound of any kind to guide him.

He dismounted and stumbled about on foot for about ten minutes with his eyes two feet from the earth, trying to find some trace of hoof. Then he listened, with his ear to the ground. There was no result.

He knew better than to shoot. After some thought he mounted and began to hunt the way back, remembering turns and twists with a gift for direction that natives might well have envied him. He found his way back to the foot of the road at a track, where ninety-nine men out of almost any hundred would have been lost hopelessly; and close to the road he overtook Darya Khan, hugging his rifle and staring about like a scorpion at bay.

"Did you expect that blue light, and this galloping away?" he asked.

"Nay, sahib; I knew nothing of it! I was told to lead the way to Khatwa."

"Come on, then!"

On the level road above King stared about him and felt in his pockets for a fresh cheroot. He struck a match and watched it to be sure his hand did not shake before he spoke. A man must command himself before trying it on others.

"Where are the others?" he asked, when he was certain of himself.

"Gone!" boomed Ismail.

King took a dozen puffs at the cheroot and stared again. In the middle of the road stood his second horse, and three mules with his baggage, including the unmarked medicine chest. Close to them were three men, making the party now only six all told, including Darya Khan, himself and Ismail.

"Gone whither?" Ismail's voice was eloquent of shocked surprise. "They followed! Was it then thy baggage on the other mules? Were they thy men? They led the mules and went!"

"Who ordered them?"

"Allah! Need the night be ordered to follow the day?"

"And thou?"

"I am thy man! She bade me be thy man!"

"And these?"

"Try them!"

King bethought him of his wrist, that was heavy with the weight of gold on it. He drew back his sleeve and held it up.

"May God be with thee!" boomed all five men at once, and the Khyber night gave back their voices, like the echoing of a well.

King took his reins and mounted.

"What now?" asked Ismail, picking up the leather bag that he regarded as his own particular charge.

"Forward!" said King. "Come along!"

He began to set a fairly fast pace, Ismail leading the spare horse and the others towing the mules along. Except for King, who was modern and out of the picture, they looked like Old Testament patriarchs, hurrying out of Egypt, as depicted in the illustrated Bibles of a generation ago—all leaning forward—each man carrying a staff—and none looking to the right or left.

"Forward!" growled Ismail. "With this man it is ever 'forward!' Is there neither rest nor fear? Has she bewitched him? Hal! Ye lazy ones! Ho! Sons of sloth! Urge the mules faster! Beat the led horse!"

So in weird, moonlight, King led them forward, straight up the narrowing gorge, between cliffs that seemed to fray the very bosom of the sky. He smoked a cigar and stared at the view, as if he were off to the mountains for a month's sport with dependable shikaris who he knew. Nobody could have looked at him and guessed he was not enjoying himself.

"That man," mumbled Ismail behind him, "is not as other sahibs I

DELETED VALENTINE

He Fired Straight at the Blue Light.

After Rewa Gunga threw away his cigarette. After that, the very best five-year-old among the Zalka Khels, watching sleepless over the rim of some stone watch tower, could have taken oath that the Khyber's unburied dead were prowling in search of empty graves. Probably their uncanny silence was their best protection; but Rewa Gunga chose to break it after a time.

"King sahib!" he called softly, repeating it louder and more loudly until King heard him. "Slowly! Not so fast! There are men among those shoulders, and to go too fast is to make them think you are afraid! To seem afraid is to invite attack! Can we defend ourselves, with three firearms between us? Look! What is that?"

They were at the point where the road begins to lead uphill, westward, leaving the bed of a ravine and ascending to join the highway built by British engineers. Below, to left and right, was pit-mouth gloom, shadows amid shadows, full of eerie whistlings, and King felt the short hair on his neck begin to rise. He urged his horse forward. The Rangar followed him, close up, and both horse and man sensed excitement.

"Look, sahib!"

After a second or two he caught a glimpse of bluish flame that flashed suddenly and died again, somewhere below to the right. Then all at once the flame burned brighter and steadier and began to move and to grow.

"Halt!" King thundered; and his voice was sharp and unexpected as a pistol crack. This was something tangible, that a man could tackle—a perfect antidote for nerves.

The blue light continued on a zig-zag course, as if a man were running among bowlders with an unusual sort of torch; and as there was no answer King drew his pistol, took about thirty seconds' aim and fired. He fired straight at the blue light.

It vanished instantly, into measureless black silence.

"Now you're jolly well done it, haven't you?" the Rangar laughed in his ear. "That was her blue light—Yasmini's!"

It was a minute before King answered, for his animals were all but frantic with their sense of their riders' state of mind; it needed horsemanship to get them back under control.

"How do you know whose light it was?" King demanded, when the horse and mare were head to head again.

"It was prearranged. She promised me a signal at the point where I am to leave the track!"

King drove both spurs home, and set his unwilling horse to scrambling downward at an angle he could not guess, into blackness he could not feel, trusting the animal to find a footing where his own eyes could make out nothing.

To his disgust he heard the Rangar immediately. To his even greater disgust the black mare overtook him. And even then, with his own mount stumbling and nearly pitching him headforemost at each lurch, he was forced to admire the mare's goatlike agility, for she descended into the gorge in running-leaps, never setting a wrong foot. When he and his horse reached the bottom at last he found the Rangar waiting for him.

At that instant the Moon Shone Through the Mist and the Gold Bracelet Glistened in the Moonlight.

He will do unexpected things!"

"Forward!" King called to them, thinking they were grumbling. "Forward, men of the 'Hills!'"

CHAPTER VIII.

After a time King urged his horse to a jog-trot, and they trotted forward until the bed of the Khyber began to grow very narrow, and All Masjid fort could not be much more than a mile away, at the widest guess. Then King drew rein and dismounted, for he would have been challenged had he ridden much farther. A challenge in the Khyber after dark consists invariably of a volley at short range, with the mere words afterward, "and the wise man takes precautions."

"Off with the mules' packs!" he ordered, and the men stood round and stared. Darya Khan, leaning on the only rifle in the party, grinned like a post-office letter box.

"Truly," growled Ismail, forgetting past expressions of a different opinion, "this man is as mad as all the other Englishmen."

"Were you ever bitten by one?" wondered King aloud.

"God forbid!"

"Then off with the packs—and hurry!"

Ismail began to obey.

"Thou! Lord of the Rivers! (For that is what Darya Khan means.) What is thy calling?"

"Badragga" (guide), he answered. "Did she not send me back down the pass to be a guide? If she says I am badragga, shall any say she lies?"

"I say thou art unpicker of mules' burdens!" answered King. "Begin!"

For answer the fellow grinned from ear to ear and thrust the rifle barrel forward insolently. King, with the movement of determination that a man makes when about to force conclusions, drew up his sleeves above the wrist. At that instant the moon shone through the mist and the gold bracelet glistened in the moonlight.

"May God be with thee!" said "Lord of the Rivers" at once. And without another word he laid down his rifle and went to help off-load the mules.

King stepped aside and cursed softly. But for a vein of wisdom that underlay his pride he would have pocketed the bracelet there and then and have refused to wear it again. But as he gazed his pride he overheard Ismail growl:

"Good for thee! He had taught thee obedience in another bat of the eye!"

"I obey her!" muttered Darya Khan. "I, too," said Ismail. "So shall he before the week dies! But now it is good to obey him. He is an ugly man to disobey!"

"I obey him until she sets me free, then," grumbled Darya Khan.

"Better for thee!" said Ismail.

King meets his brother at All Masjid fort and they hold a memorable conference. The British captain disappears in the darkness and a strange native medicine man takes his place.

Thriving Russian City That Controls River Dvina Valley, One of the Strongest Fortified.

Dvinsk, one of Russia's strongest fortified cities, is described in a bulletin issued by the National Geographic society, which says:

With a population of 110,000, including 30,000 Jews, Dvinsk is a city of prime importance to Russia, for it virtually controls the whole valley of the River Dvina, upon whose right bank it is situated, 130 miles (135 miles by river) southeast of Riga.

Not only is Dvinsk important as a strategic river point, but as a thriving railway center, it is the junction point for the great arteries of commerce running from Riga to Smolensk and from Petrograd to Vilna.

During Napoleon's Russian campaign in 1812 Marshal Oudinot tried in vain to capture the bridgehead at Dvinsk, but the honor of taking the city was reserved for Macdonald a few weeks later.

Address of Welcome—L. Dean Music—William Harmon and Miss Evelyn Thomas
Address—"Drainage and Home Improvements"—Mr. Robey of the M. A. Extension Work

Closing Song—The Star Spangled Banner

At the next meeting of the Grange election of officers will take place. The committee appointed to look after the drainage laws, the children's home at St. Joseph, Mich., wish to thank the Grange for the liberal offerings which have been received. Two shipments have been made. This is a worthy object and anyone still wishing to add a mite may do so.

Fred H. Lee will sell 60 head of Registered Holstein Friesian Cattle at auction, Wednesday, November 28th, at 10:30 a. m., at his farm, 6 1/2 miles east of Plymouth or 1/2 mile east of Livonia Center.

With the County Agent

The last week has been a very busy one for all. Corn husking is in full swing. The need of seed corn another year is as bad as it has ever been. Matured corn well cured will bring a fancy price next spring.

O. E. Robey, extension specialist in drainage and household engineering, was in the county three days this week. A drainage demonstration plot was surveyed at G. B. Brighton's in Brownstown, a way will be made to be followed when tiled and a sign at the road will indicate it as a Drainage Demonstration Plot by the Extension Department of the M. A. C. Mr. Robey also spoke at an evening meeting in Taylor township. H. G. Wells acted as chairman. Surveying was also done on the farms of William Lathers, Nankin; H. B. Rowe, Canton, and at the Sumpter Township cemetery. The Grange meeting at Plymouth, Thursday, was well attended. Mr. Robey gave a very good talk on drainage and household engineering, stating that he had found drainage in Wayne county one of the most serious problems confronting the farmers, and that drainage must be practiced before maximum crops could be attained. Mr. Robey has also advised in the building of 75 modern septic tanks for demonstration purposes in Michigan and anyone wishing advice in this respect can have same from him through the county agent. He said that the great reason why the country boys and girls did not remain on the farm was because the homes were not fitted up with the modern conveniences of the city, but that they could be had just as well in the country as in the city.

Twenty-one farmers have already signed the contract for the Cow Testing Association. The full number of thirty will probably be obtained this week. The County Agent attended the local Milk Association meetings at Plymouth and Belleville and explained the purpose of the Cow Testing Association. Thirty-seven attended the Plymouth meeting in the afternoon. The president, C. E. McClumpha was appointed as delegate to represent the local association. At Belleville in the evening 125 attended. The president, Charles Evans explained the object of the meeting and he was appointed as permanent delegate to represent the local association at any meetings of the Executive Committee of the State Association. He introduced Mr. Carmichael, editor of the Courier, who outlined the necessity of better drainage laws before a headway along the line can be attained. Mr. Brownell of Detroit, editor of Brownell's Dairy Farmer spoke on the milk question from the retailers and consumers standpoint. Such meetings are very helpful and often speakers can be obtained for such meetings that will bring out many ideas that will help greatly in the farm work.

OBITUARY.
Ellen Edgerton Hinsdale was born in Bennington, Vermont, August 19, 1832. When less than a year old her parents with their family removed to Grand Rapids, Mich. Many interesting events of early pioneer days were a part of her childhood life. On January 1, 1856, she was married to Franklin Scott Shattuck of Plymouth, Michigan. She came to Plymouth to make her home and resided ever since in the old homestead. Three children were born to them—Katie, Frank and Harry. Little Katie died at the age of five, and her husband passed to the better life September 2, 1889. When thirteen years old she united with the Congregational church of Grand Rapids, but upon her coming to Plymouth, she joined the First Presbyterian church of which she has ever since been a faithful member. She was also one of the oldest members of the Plymouth W. C. T. U., and was greatly interested in the work of that society. Her's was a beautiful christian character, marked by a perfect faith and trust in God. Her children wish to render this tribute which they feel is the highest that could be paid her:
"A wonderful, loving, christian mother."
